Self-identity, Social Cognition, and Collective Intentionality The postdoc position is part of a 5-year Advanced Grant that is financed by the European Research Council (ERC) and lead by Professor Dan Zahavi. The larger project investigates what it means to feel, think, and act as part of a we. Its guiding hypothesis is that a systematic account of the we must be embedded in a more comprehensive investigation of selfhood and social cognition. The project will systematically develop this hypothesis by combining cross-disciplinary theorizing with historical scholarship. In particular, it will draw on seminal contributions from classical phenomenology. In addition to philosophers, the project will also involve social scientists (from social anthropology, sociology, clinical psychology, and political theory).	https://cfs.ku.dk/research-activities/researchprojects/who-are-we/	zahavi@hum.ku.dk

	The postdoc should be a philosopher who has worked on the philosophy of the social sciences and who is familiar with the ongoing debate between methodological individualists and methodological holists concerning the relation between self and society. During the employment, the candidate should focus on the question of how social theory should navigate between an undersocialized and an oversocialized account of human subjectivity (e.g., rational choice theory and social constructivism). Potential applicants are encouraged to contact Dan Zahavi, zahavi@hum.ku.dk, for more information about the Who are we? project, since their submitted research plan is supposed to be situated and developed within the framework of the larger project. The post.doc is supposed to spend 20% of the employment teaching at the Department of Communication, and it will be an asset if the candidate can teach theoretical philosophy. And The University of Copenhagen (UCPH) offers a limited number of tuition waivers and grants through the Danish Government Scholarship programme.
